Are you tired of people telling you that you should go church-hopping to meet other single Christians?

Shirley is too. She tried it and felt lost and out of place whenever she walked into a different church. She was also fed up with attending christian singles workshops, seminars and events. Single events were dominated by other women. Very few men.

What should she do?

Here are some recommendation that got her talking with several prospects who started showing interest in her.

Church - Not church hopping

1. Church - but not church hopping.

Church hopping is not very effective because apart from meeting a bunch of other strangers - which has some benefits - you are not really meeting them in a context that is easy to gel.

Secondly we don't always recommend the singles ministry. It has its place but it can be quite limiting. Some singles ministries are simply an extension of the evangelistic arm of the church. They have a ton of out-reach activities that has no bearing on the real object on helping singles find Godly partners.

My suggestion is to think of areas that you are gifted in. Areas that you want to minister in. Join or create a group in church and start a ministry. Use this ministry as a spring board for visiting other churches and connecting to other like minded groups. You now have a reason and purpose to visit.

You can also join and participate in various activities put on by different church clubs, groups and departments. You should not limit yourself to single ministry group activities.

The more activities you join the higher the chances you expand your base of friends, contacts and possible prospects.

It also gives you exposure to like minded people with whom you can network. Some of these maybe potential candidates while others will become friends. And guess what these friends have their own network. It would be rather easy to access to their network of friends.

This will widen your data base of people that you know. A huge database of christian associates increase the chances of meeting a potential spouse.

Other singles

2. Other singles

This is rather easy but powerful. Do you have good male (or female if you are a man) Christian friends who are available and eligible. They have great potential as mates but not for you. You may have grown up with them and see them more as brothers and sisters.

Similarly there may be people who have approached you but things didn't work out and you both remained friends.

Make a list of these eligible platonic friends of yours.

Then form a small group of people who are on a similar journey of finding a potential spouse. Have them do the same - list their available platonic friends or family members. Then swap lists and discuss why you would recommend the people on your list.

You may just find someone that sparks your interest from someone's list. Similarly someone in your group may be interested in one of your platonic friends.

Then find a way of introducing each other to your friend(s).

3. Hobbies.

Make a list of all the hobbies, interest and things you like to do or will like to start doing. These may include things you use to do but no longer find the time to do. From this list join or create a group at your church, community or online that is based around these interests. It will put you in touch with people of similar interests, one of which could turn out to be a potential mate or may have friends or family that can be possible suitors.

4. Education, career or spiritual development

Like hobbies make a list of topics and areas you would like to develop in your education, career or spiritual growth. Then take any one and join/start a course, seminar or study group.

I am sure that your church organization (district, national or international) would offer some options. If not look online for christian organizational that do.

If all else fails it would be a good opportunity for you to start something. There are people like you who are looking for something like this.

You will begin to meet new people and the potential of meeting the one God has for you will increase.

An additional bonus from doing the activities in 3 and 4 is that you will begin to feel good and productive. Your growth and development will cause you to feel fulfilled and joyful. These qualities are invisible magnets for potential mates.

Group sports

5. Sports or recreational activities

Like number 3 and 4 above begin to get involved in sports or physical activities that you like. Of course in addition to the exposure to other people your health and energy will increase. These are 2 extra things that will make you more attractive to people.

6. Online - no not dating sites

There are many ways to meet people online other than joining expensive and frustrating dating sites.

There are many free social sites, groups, forums and online boards that are teeming with people who have similar interests to you. Simply do a web search and join some of groups.

A friend of mine, from the UK, once set up a prayer group of people all over the world. As they prayed together using online technology like Skype and Whatsapp, they got to know each other better. He soon realized that he liked one of the girls from the Philippines. They formed a long distant relationship and later got married.

They now have 3 lovely children.

That is not to say you cannot use Christian dating site but you do not have to.

Prayer

Prayer and the guidance of the Holy Spirit

7. Prayer and the guidance of the Holy Spirit

Jesus said in John 16 that He will send the Comforter, the Holy Spirit that would lead us into all truth. Although most pastors usually interpret this to be theological truths, I think this can be applied to anything.

The Holy spirit can tell you what to do; where to go and what to say that would cause you to meet the one God has in mind for you.

Ask for guidance and listen to what the spirit tells you.

He will reveal things about yourself that you may have to change. He will show you where you might be going wrong in relationships.

He will even tell you the truth about other people who might be trying to make advances on you.

Follow the guidance of the Spirit. He will take you places where you can meet potential spouses that you can never plan in your wildest dreams.

You will be surprised how and where He will guide you romantically.

Volunteering and Ministry

8. Volunteering and Ministry

As Christians we should be actively involved in ministering to others who are less fortunate than we are. This is a very rewarding experience, which boosts self esteem. When you feel good about your self you actually become more attractive to others.

You also get to meet like minded people who are volunteering like you. This expands the possibilities of meeting someone who could be right for you.

So if possible go on mission trips; volunteer to feed the hungry and homeless, visit hospitals and prisons and help in orphanages.

One lady told me that she met her husband while they were sharing soup to homeless people one Christmas day.

Friends and family

9. Friends and family

Believe it or not friends and family (and spiritually mature members of the church) are very good resources in finding a compatible spouse.

Ask them if to tell you who they might recommend for you and why. E.g. Ask a question such as “If you were to recommend someone for me who would you choose and why?”

Remember this is only a recommendation you do not have to go out with or marry the person. However, you should definitely give it serious consideration.

What are your options?

10. Consider current options

Adam was asleep when God took a rib out of his side and made a spouse for him. Similarly maybe there are possible Christian mates for you in your world but you are asleep. Your eyes are closed to them.

Consider the people that you currently know and ask God to open your eyes to any possibility that you may have been over looking.
